

POV Case Study

Headline: Volunteering through the POV has helped me feel more like myself

Before POV

“Joe” lives in the hotels for asylum seekers. He did not leave his room. He found out about the POV art workshops which was held and decided to go and try it and do something different, and to help him pass the time on whilst being there.

Quote

Thank you for letting me be a part of this.

Because of POV ...

Joe has become more himself by doing POV. At the workshop he was quiet and reserved. He took a leap of faith and joined in; his confidence grew and he became very positive and talkative to all the people who attended. Joe has also taken an interest in music and is wanting to play his own songs at the art exhibition. He is a major part on the exhibition and his confidence and personality will bloom.

Key outcomes and impact:

- Become brave and want to join in
- Given him faith in the local community
- Feels like an individual
